It will make Ohio the healthiest state in the union. ARMY TRAINED SANITARIANS FOR PUBLIC HEALTH WORK. Many sanitarians whose training has fitted them exceptionally well for peace-time public health work are being made available by the rapid demobilization of the army. Investigations conducted by army medical men have revolutionized medical and sanitary methods and technique and set them far ahead of their normal progress. Through the results obtained in curative work, preventive work, and sanitation, our men are returning to us more physically fit than ever before, and the burden of responsibility of keeping them so lies with us. With the men available who performed such admirable work in the army, now is our opportunity to mobilize our forces against disease in civil life. The knowledge and experience gained by sanitarians in conserving the health of the army will prove invaluable in keeping our people fit to work as our soldiers have kept fit to fight. In anticipation of the demand for these well-trained men returning from the Army, the American Public Health Association (Boston, Mass.) has established a free Health Employment Bureau and will be glad to furnish on application, a list of health officers, laboratory workers, vital statisticians, sanitarians, industrial hygienists, or school medical inspectors, etc., according to your needs, together with condensed information in regard to each applicant. By furthering the employment of these men you will be performing a patriotic service in recognition of their...
